I am a banyan tree planted 200 years ago in a neighborhood of Rourkella, Odisha. In my life, there have been many ups and downs. Despite having many experiences, I managed to live for so many years while still being anxious and doing my job successfully.

My seed was planted in front of his house one day by a young man with kids. Every day, he used to water me. I sprung from the ground as a little sapling one lovely morning. The young man became concerned and began to look after me thoroughly. Sadly, he passed away after 50 years and was unable to witness my ongoing growth.

I have seen the entire village. The entire town respects me much and regards me as an elderly family member, whether it be for a newborn kid or a deceased loved one's funeral procession. The local panchayat meets and makes all decisions under my shelter. They also make offerings to me on each and every occasion.

In this village, I had plenty of tree friends as well, until some evil woodcutters killed them with their axes. Some individuals have mentioned that they might also chop me down, but I don't want that to happen. Why should they chop me down when they consider me to be their nation's tree?

People mistakenly believe that trees have no emotions, yet they don't realize that we also experience happiness and sadness sometimes. I don't know how long I will live, but I do know that my village loves me very much and will continue to treat me with respect.
